Enjoyable Dinners at the Broadwater -A Lunch at the Residence of Mrs. Floyd-Jones.

The Great Falls club issued several invitations to members of the Montana club for a dance to be given at the former's club rooms on Wednesday last. Unfortunately the invitations arrived the day after the fair, and gave the invited guests no opportunity to avail themselves of what must have been a very enjoyable affair.

The young men of the city are so much engrossed in politics that social affairs have become a secondary consideration, but after the election bets are paid we may look for a revival of hostilities.

Mrs. Robert Floyd-Jones gave a pleasant lunch on Thursday last, the following ladies being present: Mrs. T. C. Power, Mrs. Samuel Word, Mrs. S. C. Ashby, Mrs. D. W. Fisk, Mrs. O. J. Sali-bury, Mrs. R. H. Buck, Mrs. W. H. Hunt, Mrs. O. R. Allen, Mrs. H. P. Kennett, Mrs. T. Bach, Mrs. M. Beattie and Miss Flannigan.

The neatest and one of the latest things in cards is a little visiting card bearing the name of a new born infant with date of birth inscribed thereon, which, with the mother's card, is sent out to all particular friends. It is certainly an early introducfriends. It is certainly an early introduc-tion into the social world.

They were lookers on in Vienna, says San Francisco Chronicle. They were wandering through the streets, and their eyes fell on an announcement of an opera performance for that evening. It was an opera they did not remember ever having heard of — "Amletto." They took seats, and when the opers began they found it was an American prima donna, and she was making a great success. Something about the characters in the opera seemed very familiar, but they did not seem to recognize it until Ophelia came on mad in white satin. Then they remembered it was Ambroise Thomas' "Hamlet." In the opera a river is seen, and when Ophelia drowns berself the body is seen floating down the river. The fair Ophelia floated down the scene while the audience called enthusiastically for the American singer. The curtain was raised, and there stood the American prima donna in white satin, and still behind, in the painted water, the dummy body floated down the stream. The property man had not been informed of the call, and forgot all about the drowned Ophelia.

Would they let their burning blushes mingle with the burning sands when the great unwashed of either sex so crowd the shore as to break the force of the fencoming surf and cause a phenomenally high tide to rise on the opposite shore? It is, however, a pleasure to see that despite adverse criticises.

Opals are unlucky, they say, probably because they are extremely brittle. An acquaintance of mine, a great collector of precious stones, lost a fine opal under particularly annoying circumstances. He was pricing a fine specimen of a well-known jeweler's. He and the shopman were passing it from hand to hand. It feil and was pulverized on the glass counter. Each accused the other, and eventually the gentleman had to pay, and the jeweler lost more than the value of the stone in avaluable customer. Science tells us that the opal is a resinous quartz which owes all its beauty to its imperfections. The milky ground, transfused, with sunset fires, derives its celestial colors from fissures interrupting the continuity of the substances. Is at therefore wonderful that I do not recommend the opal for hard wear? Art tells us to avoid the opal as we avoid the pearl, unless we can do it justice by a lovely background. There is no stone so revengeful when ill-treated. Try a fine opal on a coarse red hand or a freckled not try to reconcile a good sapphire with a sallow cheek. The spiteful thing will loudly announce your misfortune. But the gentle turquois (always supposing you get a real one—they say the Orientals have not sold us a genuine turquois for ten years) is more amiable. There is no stone that so sets off a fair white hand, and if its owner fall sick, or be troubled mentally, the turquois will temper its vivid blue to a sympathetic green. I really think there is some ground.

The question arises, "Can the New York Store possibly sell the immense quantities of Merchandise they have received this fall?" Reader, we can, and more too. We are candid and sincere in stating that the business of the New York Store to-day exceeds that of the combined dry goods houses of Helena. It cannot be otherwise, with the master facilities at our disposal. With a buyer of wonderful nerve almost continually at the head of the market, eagerly watching and sending the most exquisite fabrics and placing them here to be sold at NEW YORK PRICES, the cayture of the cultured trade was quickly donr. Even sleepy competition has awoke at last to the loss of their trade and are endeavoring to make a struggle, but too late.
